This informative book compiles the most up-to-date applications of nanobiosensors in fields ranging from agriculture to medicine. The introductory section describes different types of nanobiosensors and use of nanobiosensors towards a sustainable environment. The applications are divided into four broad sections for easy reading and understanding. The book discusses how manipulation, control, and integration of atoms and molecules are used to form materials, structures, devices, and systems in nano-scale. Chapters in the book shed light on the use of nanosensors in diagnostics and medical devices. Application in food processing as well as in cell signaling is also described. Nanobiosensors have immense use, and this book captures the most important ones.

phenomena associated with the adhesion interaction of surfaces have been a critical aspect of micro and nanosystem development and performance since the first microelectromechanical systems (MEMS) were fabricated these phenomena are ubiquitous in nature and are present in all systems however MEMS devices are particularly sensitive to their effects owing to their small size and limited actuation force that can be generated extension of MEMS technology concepts to the nanoscale and development of nanoelectromechanical systems (NEMS) will result in systems even more strongly influenced by surface forces the book is divided into five parts as follows part 1 understanding through continuum theory part 2 computer simulation of interfaces part 3 adhesion and friction measurements part 4 adhesion in practical applications and part 5 adhesion mitigation strategies this compilation constitutes the first book on this extremely important topic in the burgeoning field of MEMS/NEMS it is obvious from the topics covered in this book that bountiful information is contained here covering understanding of surface forces and adhesion as well as novel ways to mitigate adhesion in MEMS/NEMS this book should be of great interest to anyone engaged in the wonderful and fascinating field of MEMS/NEMS as it captures the current R&D activity recognition receptors play a key role in the successful implementation of chemical and biosensors molecular recognition refers to non covalent specific binding between molecules one of which is typically a macromolecule or a molecular assembly and the other is the target molecule ligand or analyte biomolecular recognition is typically driven by many weak interactions such as hydrogen bonding metal coordination hydrophobic forces van der waals forces pi pi interactions and electrostatic interaction due to permanent charges dipoles and quadrupoles the polarization of charge distributions by the interaction partner leading to induction and dispersion forces and pauli exclusion principle derived inter atomic repulsion and a strong attractive force arising largely from the entropy of the solvent and termed the hydrophobic effect in recent years there has been much progress in understanding the forces that drive the formation of such complexes and how these forces are related to the physical properties of the interacting molecules and their environment allows rational design of molecules and materials that interact in specific and desired ways this book presents a significant and up to date review of the various recognition elements their immobilization characterization techniques by a panel of distinguished scientists this work is a comprehensive approach to the recognition receptors area presenting a thorough knowledge of the subject and an effective integration of these receptors on sensor surfaces in order to appropriately convey the state of the art fundamentals and applications of the most innovative approaches
